B/The Big Idea

 The surprise that comes with nding out that

Tejas Ravishankar,

founder of

UAE-based developer productivity and experience platform Dimension, is only 16 years old, is a reaction that very quickly wears off- simply because it is much easier to be enthralled by the teenagers business vision instead. My journey as a developer began [in 2020] when I was 13 and in the eighth grade, Ravishankar recalls. The lockdown [during the COVID-19 crisis] meant no interactions with friends, and it gave me ample time to explore coding. I found it magical that you could create whatever you imagined by keying in a few commands. Soon, I was spending most of my time developing software. However, as a coder working on building my own tools and contributing towards other open-source projects, I faced several issues.
